

Women's Cross Country

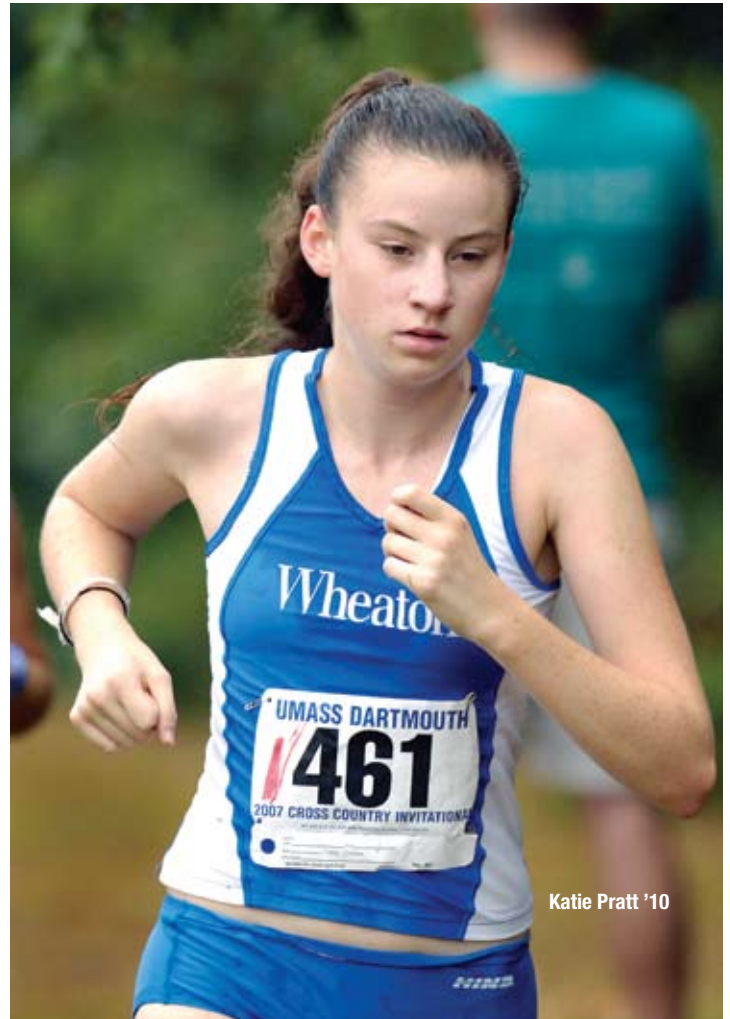

For the sixth time in nine years, the Lyons placed among the top two teams at the New England Women's and Men's Athletic Conference (NEWMAC) Championship. Third-place showings at the Amherst Invitational and Keene State Invitational were followed by a victory at October's Saints Invitational. Wheaton took 15th out of 49 squads at the NCAA Division III New England Championship in November.

Co-captain Lauren Reddy '09 capped a stellar senior year by drawing all-region honors thanks to placing among the top 35 at the NCAA Division III New England Championship. The first Lyon to finish at each of the team's seven meets, Reddy won a pair of races and took second at the NEWMAC Championship, marking the fourth straight season that a Lyon was runner-up. Lily Calderwood '09 and co-captain Amanda Rawson '09 completed a standout senior trio, each joining Reddy in earning all-conference accolades. Calderwood was among Wheaton's top three finishers at each meet, and Rawson finished in the team's top three during all six of her races. Kimberly Nash '12 was the fourth Lyon to complete the NCAA regional championship, and classmate Rachel Scavera '12 crossed the finish line as the fourth Wheaton runner at four meets. The program's future success will rely greatly upon younger classes and efforts of runners such as Nash and Scavera.

Head coach
Paul Carr

Paul Carr began his cross country coaching tenure at Wheaton in 1999, bringing a wealth of experience and success with him from the high school ranks.

Carr's coaching expertise has had a dramatic impact on the success of the men's and women's programs. Under his tutelage, the women have finished among the top two at the NEWMAC Championship six times, while the men have been among the top four three times.

With a healthy balance of seasoned runners and solid underclassmen, the women's squad captured its first conference championship in program history in 2004; the men finished fourth in the conference meet that year. Both teams secured All-America individual finishes at the NCAA Division III Championship. In 2006, Wheaton's women sent another competitor to the national meet. The squad finished second in the conference in both 2007 and 2008.

Before coming to Wheaton, Carr coached the Oliver Ames High School cross country team in nearby Easton to boys' state championships in 1997 and 1998. A USA Track & Field (USATF) Level I certified coach, Carr nurtured the talent of the nation's top high school distance runner, who ran 4:02 in the mile and 8:50 in the two mile. Both times were the best in the nation for those events. His second runner ran a 4:14 mile. Carr was recognized as the 1998 Boston Globe Coach of the Year for Division II.

Carr graduated from the University of Massachusetts-Amherst with a bachelor's degree in sport management. He was a three-year cross country letterwinner with the Minutemen.
